Working with Families Impacted by Parental Personality Disorders

November 20th from 1–3:00 EST
December 1st from 1–3:00 EST

When parents suffer from mental illness, the entire family is impacted. This training explores the effect on children when their parents have a Personality Disorder mental health diagnosis. Participants will also engage in an exercise to help them have greater empathy for parents suffering from Personality Disorder. This training offers practical recommendations on how to facilitate support and change for parents who may struggle with their symptoms. Participants will also develop informal action plans to assist them in their own professional work with families.

This intermediate level training is designed to support caseworkers, social workers, counselors, psychologists, and other helping professionals who are working alongside families impacted by a parent who is diagnosed with a Personality Disorder. This informative session will include didactic lecture, as well as group interaction, personal reflection, and a time for Q & A.

Participants will be able to:

- Describe at least 5 key effects Personality Disorder may have on a parent's ability to parent.
- Identify at least three core strategies to work more effectively with families impacted when a parent is struggling with a Personality Disorder.
- Develop an action plan to assist them in their work with families impacted by when a parent is struggling with a Personality Disorder.
